

From Russia and beyond: the ICC global standing, while countries' resignation is getting serious

16 Gennaio 2017

Riccardo Vecellio Segate

ABSTRACT

This article aims to critically examine the International Criminal Court, established in 2002 to complement domestic jurisdiction in prosecuting the gravest crimes (war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide, and – most recently – crimes of aggression), in a multidimensional manner, assessing its place in relation to public international law, international criminal law and international human rights law.

Simultaneously, it will problematize compatibility of the Rome Statute, the Court's founding treaty, with national jurisdictions of both Member and Nonmember states to the ICC, and raise questions about the dynamics between the institution and the UN Security Council, which plays a crucial supranational role in the process of initiating and authorizing prosecutions of crimes committed on the territories, or by the nationals of Non-member countries.

In the light of the recent crisis the ICC suffered in the form of African demarche (with South Africa, Gambia and Burundi declared their pull-out in November 2016), followed closely by Russia's signature withdrawal, and Kenyan, Ugandan and Filipino authorities expressing their significantly undermined trust in the judicial institution, the need to reflect on the relevance and feasibility of the initial hopes put in the Rome Statute comes particularly acute, as the international community is puzzled by the controversial question of how to improve the Court while managing to attract as many states (with often mutually exclusive viewpoints on the principles of international law) to sign the Statute.

Per visualizzare l'articolo clicca qui.

ABSTRACT

This article aims to critically examine the International Criminal Court, established in 2002 to complement domestic jurisdiction in prosecuting the gravest crimes (war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide, and – most recently – crimes of aggression), in a multidimensional manner, assessing its place in relation to public international law, international criminal law and international human rights law.

Simultaneously, it will problematize compatibility of the Rome Statute, the Court's founding treaty, with national jurisdictions of both Member and Nonmember states to the ICC, and raise questions about the dynamics between the institution and the UN Security Council, which plays a crucial supranational role in the process of initiating and authorizing prosecutions of crimes committed on the territories, or by the nationals of Non-member countries.

In the light of the recent crisis the ICC suffered in the form of African demarche (with South Africa, Gambia and Burundi declared their pull-out in November 2016), followed closely by Russia's signature withdrawal, and Kenyan, Ugandan and Filipino authorities expressing their significantly undermined trust in the judicial institution, the need to reflect on the relevance and feasibility of the initial hopes put in the Rome Statute comes particularly acute, as the international community is puzzled by the controversial question of how to improve the Court while managing to attract as many states (with often mutually exclusive viewpoints on the principles of international law) to sign the Statute.

Per visualizzare l'articolo clicca qui.

TAG: aggressione, crimini, diritti umani, genocidio, Diritto internazionale, Diritto penale internazionale

Avvertenza

La pubblicazione di contributi, approfondimenti, articoli e in genere di tutte le opere dottrinarie e di commento (ivi comprese le news) presenti su Filodiritto è stata concessa (e richiesta) dai rispettivi autori, titolari di tutti i diritti morali e patrimoniali ai sensi della legge sul diritto d'autore e sui diritti connessi (Legge 633/1941). La riproduzione ed ogni altra forma di diffusione al pubblico delle predette opere (anche in parte), in difetto di autorizzazione dell'autore, è punita a norma degli articoli 171, 171-bis, 171-ter, 174-bis e 174-ter della menzionata Legge 633/1941. È consentito scaricare, prendere visione, estrarre copia o stampare i documenti pubblicati su Filodiritto nella sezione Dottrina per ragioni esclusivamente personali, a scopo informativo-culturale e non commerciale, esclusa ogni modifica o alterazione. Sono parimenti consentite le citazioni a titolo di cronaca, studio, critica o recensione, purché accompagnate dal nome dell'autore dell'articolo e dall'indicazione della fonte, ad esempio: Luca Martini, La discrezionalità del sanitario nella qualificazione di reato perseguitabile d'ufficio ai fini dell'obbligo di referto ex. art 365 cod. pen., in "Filodiritto" (<https://www.filodiritto.com>), con relativo collegamento ipertestuale. Se l'autore non è altrimenti indicato i diritti sono di Inforomatica S.r.l. e la riproduzione è vietata senza il consenso esplicito della stessa. È sempre gradita la comunicazione del testo, telematico o cartaceo, ove è avvenuta la citazione.
